

The AIS Languages
Conference 2014:

Languages Education - Vital and Viable

Matthew Absalom
Keynote Speaker

Matthew Absalom is a university teacher and researcher, professional linguist, Italian language coach, translator and published author. Matthew has a reputation as an innovative and successful educator and has published on a range of topics including computer assisted language learning.

Matthew is a passionate advocate for languages and is the current president of the Australian Federation of Modern Language Teacher Associations (AFMLTA).

What does a sustainable Languages program look like in a variety of school contexts? What are the key elements of an effective Languages program? How can we increase the number of students studying Languages in primary and secondary schools? Can we do something differently that would strengthen Languages in our schools?

Focussing on leadership and classroom practice, this conference will explore the challenges and opportunities in implementing a successful Languages program.

Speakers include:

- University language educators
- Experienced school leaders
- Innovative languages teachers
- Curriculum developers
- ICT and Languages consultants

This conference will be an opportunity to:

- Network and share with colleagues
- Hear school stories from experienced school leaders and language teachers
- Participate in workshops on:
 - Innovative ICT in Languages education
 - Effective leadership in Languages
 - Language advocacy and promotion strategies
- Be updated on the latest national and state trends in languages education
